Internet Reporting

The Internet may be the "information superhighway", but when it comes to using it as a work tool to distribute your information it's often not an easy way to get things done. All that changes with eReports.

An eReport is a preformatted on-line document. Your project information, photos, important notes, even project documents and templates are all integrated into a professional looking report. What makes eReports unique is that you get the benefit of a professional website, but you don't need technical know-how to build one.

Editor-in-Chief

As the editor of your eReport, you send your browser to a "site prep" page we provide. You fill in the blanks with specifics about your project. Want to upload some pictures? Select one of your digital photos, and click the "upload" button. Need to make sure your team members have the new Excel timesheet? Put that on the site too. In a few minutes, your project will have a professional-looking, useful, dynamic website, where team members can go for answers—instead of calling you.

Subscription

When you give your eReport's address to your team members, they will provide a user name and password and have access to read your report or download files you've put on the site. If they want to change information on the eReport, they can't. Only the editor gets to do that. eReports are designed to move with your project. When you're ready to upload a new report, the old report will automatically be archived, and the new report will be "published". Subscribers still go to the same site, but now they see your most current eReport.

Cost Savings

eReports provides you with the benefits of a professional website without the cost, complex configurations, new software, and formidable learning curve that come with running your own site. Your eReport is on-line and available 24/7, from any Internet-enabled computer in the world. Spare yourself the costs and the inefficiencies of faxes, mail and overnight delivery and bring your information to the information age.
